BLM Launches New and Improved Recreation Website

Santa Fe, NM – The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) New Mexico has rolled out a dramatic new redesign and upgrade of its recreation information on the web. Over 50 different recreation areas are showcased on a comprehensive, easy-to-use website that can be accessed either geographically or by recreation activity. Critical visitor information is available for each site, including permitted activities, facilities, maps, access, fees, and rules. The website address is www.nm.blm.gov.

“We’re excited about our website, and we invite the public to learn more about our recreation areas,” said State Director Linda Rundell. “Visitors to public lands can experience a closeness to the landscape that’s just beyond their living room, and find enough excitement to satisfy all outdoor enthusiasts,” she added.

Experience the solitude and grandeur of America’s outback--tour our new website and enjoy yourself on New Mexico’s public lands.
